Introduction

1 When it all goes wrong

Improv in Business

2 What is improv

The need for leaders who can improvise has never been greater.

3 Leaders who improvise

There are 6 key traits that all leaders who successfully use improv leverage to lead in the moment successfully.

4 The role of psychological safety

Building a space of psychological safety is the key to high-performing people, teams and cultures.

Improv Tools

5 'Yes and' mindset

Building a 'Yes And' mindset is key to possibility and promise and to meeting the moment at hand.

6 Self awareness

Developing self-awareness is key to working your leadership muscle.

7 Listening and presence
A key tool for leaders is the ability to listen to others and help them feel heard.

8 Making others shine
Making people look good and having each others backs is a crucial principle in improvisation.

9 Risk, mistakes and gifts
Mistakes mean people are trying and learning.

10 Being spontaneous
Spontaneity and play happens when you let go and refrain from judgment.

11 Building learning culture
Building a 'learning' culture that runs on improv means making sure the tools flourish in your people and teams.

Improv and Courage

12 Fear and courage
Leaders who improvise recognize that fear and courage are two sides of the same coin.

13 Play with fear
Leading in the moment requires us to make choices about the unknown.

14 Vulnerability is key
Vulnerability is the bridge to leaning into fear in order to grow your courage muscle.

15 The leadership gap
Meeting yourself where you're at is always a first step.

16 Intent vs. impact
Leaders who lean into vulnerability acknowledge impact – and it's not related to intent.

Brave Conversations

17 Questioning your stories
When you feel fear, there is an opportunity to step into leadership growth.

18 Rewriting your stories
Having more meaningful conversations relies on being able to change your narrative.

Conclusion

19 Exercising your improv muscle
